REMARKS

The 2012 growing season got underway with a mild, damp spring, reflected in the vines' slow growth and uneven flowering. These conditions persisted after the setting period, allowing the grapes to grow rapidly until bunch formation was complete. The summer was dry, and conditions turned very hot from mid-August onwards. The lack of water became more acute, partially making up for the rainy springtime in terms of the final concentration of the fruit. The late season saw some rain but the clay soils allowed the grapes to reach excellent phenolic maturity, making for a stress-free harvest.
