REMARKS

2013 started with a cool and very rainy winter. The rainy conditions dragged on into the spring, leading to uneven growth and flowering. Coulture put paid to any hopes of an abundant harvest, particularly for the Merlot. The summer was warm but stormy, with the rains topping up the water table and delaying the growth halt needed for the vines to focus their energy on producing concentrated fruit. Already hampered by the tricky flowering period, the vines needed to be relieved of their late-developing bunches in order to maximise the quality of the remaining fruit. Nor was the late season particularly conducive to red wine production: with cool, damp conditions, the winegrowers faced a delicate balancing act to bring in the grapes at maximum maturity but before the onset of any problems. A vintage beset by numerous technical challenges, 2013 is now a great source of pride for Château Les Carmes Haut-Brion, marking a turning point in the evolution of the estate's distinctive style.
